Why you Should Attend?

All organizational initiatives including projects are treated as organizational investments, judged and assessed according to how they impact the bottom line of the organization, once they deliver their expected results.

As a result, Project managers have the responsibility to ensure proper use of the organizational resources assigned to them and to meet all project financial objectives.

The financial impact of the project you are leading is typically the major factor to initiate this project in the first place.

Who Should Attend?

This course is recommended for all technical and management practitioners in projects, including:

- Program and project Managers (All industries)
- Business Analysts Strategy and Operational Planners
- Project Associates and Coordinators
- Project Control Officers
